Founded in 1963 by two prominent Austrians living in exile – the sociologist Paul F. Lazarsfeld and the economist Oskar Morgenstern – with the financial support from the Ford Foundation, the Austrian Federal Ministry of Education, and the City of Vienna, the Institute for Advanced Studies (IHS) is the first institution for postgraduate education and research in economics and the social sciences in Austria. The Political Science Series presents research done at the Department of Political Science and aims to share “work in progress” before formal publication. It includes papers by the Department’s teaching and research staff, visiting professors, graduate students, visiting fellows, and invited participants in seminars, workshops, and conferences. As usual, authors bear full responsibility for the content of their contributions.

Das Institut für Höhere Studien (IHS) wurde im Jahr 1963 von zwei prominenten Exilösterreichern – dem Soziologen Paul F. Lazarsfeld und dem Ökonomen Oskar Morgenstern – mit Hilfe der Ford-Stiftung, des Österreichischen Bundesministeriums für Unterricht und der Stadt Wien gegründet und ist somit die erste nachuniversitäre Lehr- und Forschungsstätte für die Sozial- und Wirtschaftswissenschaften in Österreich. Die Reihe Politikwissenschaft bietet Einblick in die Forschungsarbeit der Abteilung für Politikwissenschaft und verfolgt das Ziel, abteilungsinterne Diskussionsbeiträge einer breiteren fachinternen Öffentlichkeit zugänglich zu machen. Die inhaltliche Verantwortung für die veröffentlichten Beiträge liegt bei den Autoren und Autorinnen. Gastbeiträge werden als solche gekennzeichnet.

1. Introduction

Political Science at the Institute for Advanced Studies (IHS)

(by Gerda Falkner)

As the newly appointed Head of Department, it is my pleasure to offer a brief overview here of the state of affairs by summer 2003. This brochure is intended to provide a useful guide to all who seek information on the department and its staff (1), the students and the European Studies course (2) and, last but not least, the research output (3).

1) The Department of Political Science has been one of the IHS' core scientific units since the inauguration of the Institute for Advanced Studies in autumn 1963. The Department is currently in a process of reform. This concerns teaching, research, personnel and general orientation. In an increasingly competitive environment, we want to attain top-level standards in teaching as well as research. On the level of publications, this refers to rated journals, refereed book series of first class publishers and contributions to major international conferences.

Political science is a broad field and specialization has reached a very high level. Even medium-sized political science departments at universities and international research institutions encounter problems in covering the discipline entirely. Hence, developing a particular profile is all the more necessary in the case of a department of only four permanent scientific staff members. As desired by the IHS Kuratorium (Board of Trustees) and the Director, the Department of Political Science will therefore specialize in issues of European integration, understood in a very broad sense. These include the EU (its treaties, political institutions and decision-making patterns, policies, etc.) as well as the intended and unintended feedback effects of EU policies on present and future member states (encompassing, inter alia, compliance with EU law) and on the international environment.

European integration is, for several reasons, a particularly challenging political science specialization. The EU as the prime example of regional cooperation is of truly global significance while, at the same time, the effects of European integration reach deep into the fabric of national and even local governance. Most crucially, however, Europeanization issues are at the forefront of theoretical debates and, furthermore, at the intersection of all traditional political science specializations. European integration therefore offers an ideal concentration of focus, on the one hand, and broad coverage of highly relevant issues and scholarly approaches, on the other hand. In other words, this IHS Department of Political Science aims at combining the virtues of both specialization and integration (of issues, perspectives, theories and methodologies).

With regard to structure and personnel, it should be mentioned here that, during more than a decade, the IHS researchers in sociology and in political science had a common head of department. In early 2002, however, it was decided to re-establish two independent departments, taking due account of the ever-increasing differentiation of topics and networks in present day social sciences.

Currently, the Department of Political Science is the smallest of all IHS departments. Its personnel includes, in addition to the Secretary (Gertrud Hafner), and the Head of Department (Gerda Falkner), three research and teaching assistants (in German: wissenschaftliche Assistentinnen und Assistenten). As of September 2003, the research and teaching assistants are Sylvia Kritzinger, Irina Michalowitz and Oliver Treib. In addition, there are researchers in externally funded research projects (ProjektassistentInnen). Currently, the Department hosts two such researchers: Caroline Wörgötter conducts research on EU social policy in a project for the Jubiläumsfonds of the Österreichische Nationalbank, and Karin Liebhart cooperates on various projects with the Gesellschaft für Politische Aufklärung.

2) The IHS teaches post-graduate courses for graduates with at least a Masters degree. It should be mentioned here that IHS students are traditionally called “scholars” (Scholarinnen und Scholaren). This is a somewhat strange Anglicism one quickly grows accustomed to. Our “scholars” are usually Ph.D. students from universities inside and outside Austria and they typically become researchers after receiving their IHS diploma.¹ We are proud that a large number of the most prominent Austrian political scientists at top senior level have received their political science education at the Institute for Advanced Studies in Vienna.²

The IHS offers post-university education in the social sciences (economics, finance, sociology, and political science) and strives to attain international and top-level standards. The working languages are English and German. The two-year course offered in the Department of Political Science is entitled “European Studies” and focuses on European integration in the broad sense (as already outlined above).

It is a longstanding tradition of the IHS to combine quantitative and qualitative methodology and to promote interdisciplinary work in the social sciences. Post-graduate training in the Department of Political Science therefore includes broader social science approaches and topics. As to the traditional sub-disciplines of political science, our orientation is also an inclusive one. International relations, domestic politics, policy studies, comparative analysis,

1 University professors are actually the largest single group of IHS alumni (see Bernhard Felderer (ed.), Wirtschafts- und Sozialwissenschaften zwischen Theorie und Praxis, 30 Jahre Institut für Höhere Studien in Wien. Physica Verlag, Heidelberg, 1993). Together with university assistants (lecturers) and extra-university researchers, this group accounts for 53% of all IHS alumni (ibid., p. 3).

2 It should be mentioned that political science was only established rather late as a discipline at the Austrian universities.

etc. all have their place, albeit not according to a system of artificial segregation. Instead, all these perspectives, and their related theories and methods, are discussed in appropriate form in every seminar. Even beyond the traditional sub-disciplines, further perspectives, such as gender-related aspects, are crucial to every unit of the curriculum.

The first semester for all students at the IHS mainly provides intense courses in quantitative methodology. Classes in qualitative methods start then, too, but continue during the second semester. The ongoing political science programme for 2002–2004 began with a seminar entitled “Introduction to Social Science Theory”, in which different modes of explanation in political science were explored.

This served to reconcile the different educational backgrounds of the students and to refresh their theory-related knowledge. In December 2002, another visiting teacher introduced the students to special work modes which optimize the use of literature search and citation resources in the area of European integration (web sites, databases, bibliographic software).

The second semester of our European studies course (spring 2003) served to educate our “scholars” in the specific competences and decision-making patterns at the EU level, including the legal foundations of the EU and the constitutional debate. Policy networks, the democratic deficit and problem-solving capacity were discussed in a comparative perspective. Finally, multi-level governance in Europe was evaluated, paying attention to the inclusion of different regional layers and the persistence, as well as revision, of identities.

Semester 3 (autumn 2003) will focus on Europeanization in a more general sense and on integration theory. Europeanization as a concept and as an empirical phenomenon will be looked at from a policy-specific and comparative level. The current and future member states as well as the wider environment in the geographical sense will be taken into consideration. Matters of implementation and application of EU law are also an issue in this context. The theory-oriented education will cover the classical integration theories as well as, inter alia, game-theoretical approaches to European studies.

Finally, the fourth semester (spring 2004) will discuss current challenges to different European policies. This will allow the “scholars” to deepen their understanding of policy issues and to focus on their own research (which is typically in one particular EU policy area). Among other things, the process of EU enlargement, and the ensuing problems and prospects for various policies at both the EU level and the national level, will be relevant here. Open coordination and soft law as novel instruments in the multi-level policy process will be discussed, too.

3) A further goal of this brochure is to inform you of our recent research output and other activities. Please find the relevant data in the following chapters, sorted by author.

In closing, let me mention that our homepage offers you an up-to-date overview of the current situation concerning personnel and activities.
